HARRY OHDE IS IBEW LOCAL 134'S LABOR MAN OF THE YEAR

This year NECA/IBEW 134 was very proud to pronounce Harry Ohde as

Labor Man of The Year, a recognition reserved for those that truly give to the industry and make a difference for union members.

Don Finn, Business Manager & Financial Secretary of IBEW 134, is quick to provide praise for all the dedication and service that Ohde has provided. "Harry is involved in so many committees and sits on so many boards, not just for his recent pioneering efforts for renewable energy training, but everything to do with the Union electrical industry."

He is not shy when it comes to helping others. His recent work for Saint Margaret of Scotland, located just off 99th and the Dan Ryan, has generated up to $500,000 worth of donated time required to overhaul outdated electrical work throughout the facility, making it code compliant and efficient.

When speaking with Harry, his enthusiasm overflows, not only for the Union, but also for his passion as an educator. It is here he makes a real difference to the community while doing what he loves — ensuring all union electricians coming out of the South Suburban training facility have the knowledge and expertise required to flourish in a competitive market.

When it comes to having an influence, perhaps Harry's biggest contribution has been his keen vision and persistence that led to one of the Union's most recent historic achievements, the development of a Renewable Energy Training Field, located at NECA/IBEW local 134's IN-TECH facility in Alsip.

There is simply no other facility of its kind in the country, and Harry understood the timeliness and impact that such a technological showcase would provide. It serves as the country's very first hands-on training facility of its kind, encompassing all aspects of Renewable Energy, from solar to wind, to electric vehicle charging, to energy storage and management, all working together in a real-case example of a functional micro grid.

CISCO congratulates Harry Ohde for a lifetime of service to the union construction industry!

CONSTRUCTION WEEK – OCT. 2 - 6

We invite and encourage you to join in celebrating Construction Week 2017! The Master Builders of Iowa held the first annual Construction Week in 2016 and saw many successes. This year they have invited associations nationwide to join together to spread awareness about opportunities in the industry.

As the demand for construction continues to rise, so does the need for an educated, talented and qualified labor force. Today's labor shortage is not going to fix itself. As a response, contractors across the nation are declaring the first week in October of each year as "Construction Week."

As a member of the construction industry, you are uniquely positioned as the best example of why this is such a great industry to have a career in. Be a part of the movement to proudly promote construction as a preferred career choice.
